

I am opposed to the expansion of license ownership rights that may allow a smaller pool of owners to control the electronic media in the US. Its bad for democracy and its bad for the dissemination of the broadest possible perspective of the news and it will limit citizens to choose from what should be a wider array of opinion.

This would continue a trend where power is concentrated among the few with the greatest amount of available fortune to control what the rest of the country has access to, whether news, entertainment, knowledge or commerce. A small core of privileged - mostly by their wealth - will determine what the ordinary citizen, not so privileged, will see and hear in the media.
